Key findings

- Vegetables/fruit and dairy products are likely to be the major focus of future organic food development
- Vegetables formed the largest part of the organics market
- Organics had yet to make significant inroads into major dairy products, meat and bakery markets
- Organic potatoes had the highest sales in terms of retail value, yet
 - only one in five households bought organic potatoes
 - the average frequency of purchase was only eight times per year
- Substantial price premium was achieved by organic vegetables
- Organics consumption was concentrated in Greater Belfast and ABC1 households
- The grocery multiples were the major route to market
